Av.gust 3, 1903:

In Rememberance. The following lines on the death of Miss Cora Catherine Skalley are published by request of a friend: She faded away liks the blooming rose. In her youth so bright and fair But we know she is sweetly sleeping

Free from sorrow, pain and care, Her relatives have our greatest sym pathy-For we know their hearts are sore. Yet there is some consolution-

She will suffer now no more. They will sadly, sadly miss her-In their home at evening fall, But no one should too sadly raourn

For no doubt her mother's waiting-Anxiously waiting at the door To receive her beloved daughter On the bright celestial shore. She was patient thro' her illness.

At the loving angels call.

Had with none no fault to find. But the sisterly tle is broken. That so long their hearts entwined. Many friends will greatly miss ber.

And will sadly mourn their loss. But we must bear the burden: Altho' heavy seems the cross For her gentle disposition.

All who knew her held her dear And we cannot help but miss her. While we'er left to linger here. To ber kind and loving parent.

Sisters and brothers fond. There is yet a bright hope gleaming. They can meet her soon beyond. She has gone where heat of summer

Storms of winter are not known. With the saints she's sweetly resting. In the bright celestial ho All of life is full of sorrow. We should east our hopes on high. Where our souls will live forever.
